

Natural gas has an odor for a

Safety Reason

Some combustible gases, like natural gas, are odorless and colorless. A chemical odorant is added to natural gas to give it a distinctive smell so the presence of natural gas can be detected.

Always be sensitive to the slightest smell. Learn to recognize the odor of natural gas.

To become familiar with the smell of natural gas, call your natural gas dealer for a scratch-and-sniff brochure.

Specialty Chemicals

Performance by design. Caring by choice.™

NOTICE: This packet/inset contains accurate and reliable information to the best of Chevron Phillips Chemical's knowledge, but our suggestions and recommendations cannot be guaranteed because the conditions of use are beyond our control. Chevron Phillips Chemical does not produce, distribute or sell natural/propane gas, and is not an expert in odorized natural/propane gas and the dangers associated with its use. The information contained in this packet/inset is a compilation of information obtained from various sources within the natural/propane gas industry. Information contained herein is given without reference to any intellectual property issues, as well as federal, state or local laws which may be encountered in the use thereof. The user expressly assumes all risk and liability, whether based in contract, tort or otherwise, in connection with the use of the information contained herein. This information is provided for convenience only and the end user is encouraged to independently verify whether the use of or reliance on this information is suitable for the user's specific needs and legal compliance requirements, as Chevron Phillips Chemical assumes no responsibility for the use of information presented herein and hereby disclaims all liability in regard to its use.